

THE FILTHY LEFT

"Let's get somethin' straight: The only people who have the capacity — organizational capacity and the muscle — to keep, as they say, the barbarians from the gate, is organized labor."

Actually, no. As we saw in Wisconsin and now in other front-line states, the left's deployed union shock troops are the barbarians, and they're already inside the gate. In fact, they've occupied the building.

The results aren't pretty. The dirty (literally) little secret is that "organized muscle" is filthy. This bunch is the very reason I coined the term: long-haired, maggot-infested, dope-smoking, phony-baloney, plastic-banana, good-time rock'n'roll FM types. I've been using that phrase my whole career, and it still perfectly describes these ill-raised, classless, thug lefties.

Unlike the Tea Partiers, who (being civilized and having respect for property) clean up after themselves, leaving places neater than they find them — the lib slob's protests/demonstrations always leave tons of garbage behind. They. Don't. Care.

It is politically incorrect to point this out. On March 1, Wisconsin state Senator Glenn Grothman (R) described the state of the capitol building in Madison, WI to Lawrence O'Donnell on MSNBC's "The Last Word": "[T]he building is becoming a pigsty. People are staying overnight; the building smells. We used to have nice little groups of 4th grade children walking through the building ... All that's being shut down by a bunch of slob's taking up the building. We can no longer continue to have all these slob's in the building."

The left-wing blogosphere was outraged. Daily Kos retorted that the Capitol Building Occupiers' dirt was noble, just like World War II soldiers who "slept in the mud." O'Donnell brought Grothman back on his show the next night to try to badger him into recanting. To his credit, Grothman again said: "They're slob's."

Telling the truth about these people is the key to victory. They cannot stand it. Hold up the mirror, early and often, to show who they are. Because who they are is their Achilles heel. Such photos need to be shown in every campaign between now and November 2012: This is who the left is. Disgusting, arrogant, grasping, lazy, greedy, dishonorable. They need to go. And bring disinfectant.
